

Notes on Contributors

RICHARD BAILEY is Professor of Education in the Centre of Educational Research at Canterbury Christ Church University College, United Kingdom, where he convenes the Research for International Childhood and Community Studies group. His recent publications include Education in the Open Society—Karl Popper and Schooling (Ashgate, 2000) and Supporting Physical Development in the Early Years (Open University Press, 2002).

STEPHEN J. BALL is Karl Mannheim Professor of Sociology of Education and Director of the Education Policy Research Unit at the Institute of Education, University of London. His most recent book, Class Strategies and the Education Market: the middle classes and social advantage (2003), examines aspects of class inequality.

DAVID BUCKINGHAM is Professor of Education at the Institute of Education, where he directs the Centre for the Study of Children, Youth and Media. He has conducted a number of research projects on children's interactions with electronic media and on media education.

FEYISA DEMIE is Head of Research and Statistics at Lambeth Education. He has worked closely with schools since 1990 to help them in the effective use of performance data to support their school improvement strategies and engage in school self-evaluation. His current research programme includes pupil mobility in schools and the achievement of Black Caribbean pupils.

MARK LEVENE is Professor of Computer Science at the School of Computer Science and Information Systems, Birkbeck College, University of London, where his research interests include hypertext, web navigation and web dynamics. He is Co-director of the London Knowledge Lab.

DON PETERSON is Senior Lecturer in ICT in Education at the Institute of Education, University of London, where his research interests include personalised e-learning services for globalising knowledge economies. He is a member of the London Knowledge Lab.

MARGARET SCANLON is a Research Officer in the Centre for the Study of Children, Youth and Media at the Institute of Education, University of London. Over the last three years she has worked on two ESRC-funded projects on children's educational media.

PAUL TEMPLE worked as a policy analyst in London regional government before entering educational management. Since 1990, the author has worked extensively on education reform projects across Central and Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union. He is now a lecturer in higher education at the Institute of Education, University of London, where he manages the MBA programme in higher education management.